

Can You Afford to Ignore This Easy Way To Increase Productivity By 60%?

Despite some very minor signs of improvement, UK productivity still remains woefully poor. Even recent signs of growth have been attributed to fewer hours being worked rather than increased output. Whatever steps UK organisations are taking to turnaround productivity it seems that they are not having the desired impact quickly enough.

But, can we really afford to wait?

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Philip Hammond has suggested that the productivity challenge is at the heart of much of the “disaffection with our politics and society” and that an uplift in productivity could “put right many of the challenges that we are facing across our society.”¹

Mr Hammond has already blamed poor performing managers for the £84 billion productivity loss.

Mr Hammond has already blamed poor performing managers for the £84 billion productivity loss, a view backed by the Office of National Statistics who stated there was a ‘significant correlation between management practices and labour productivity’ reporting that each 0.1 increase in their “management score” is associated with a 9.6% increase in productivity.

With such a lot at stake, organisations must act fast to increase management capability and close the productivity gap.

A herculean challenge? We don’t think so because we have proven that it’s possible to increase productivity by 60% in one simple step.

For almost two decades we have been helping our clients, most of whom are household names and feature in the FTSE 500, to improve engagement, performance and productivity in their organisations. Our programmes transform leader and manager behaviour in a way that improves innovation, ownership and accountability which has an amazing impact on productivity. Here are some of the results we typically see:

IMPACT	VALUE
Quicker problem solving	£4 million
Quicker project delivery	£1 million
Better issue resolution	£250,000
Better negotiation	€1-2 million
Lower annual sickness	£2,000
More efficient processes	11% Increase YOY
